

About

Welcome to the Island Trout Site. This site is about catching all of the trout on the four Atlantic Islands of Ireland, Greenland, Iceland and the British Isles. It is about fly fishing the countries of England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Greenland and Iceland. The site is part of the Trout Adventures series of sites and books about information on trout and trout destinations around the world. Other trout sites are www.northamericatrout.com and www.fareasttrout.com. There are also books with more information on all of the countries in these parts of the world.

The Islands Trout Site provides fly fishing information on the rivers and lakes in the island countries. It is about catching all of the trout species that are available and what it takes to be successful. The book on this part of the world offers more information but much is on the site with trout pictures and some of the flies that caught fish. Two of the countries in this group of islands are at the top of the list for large fish and another has fish that can be found nowhere else. Greenland and Iceland are world class destinations for Arctic Char and Brown Trout. The Arctic Char of Greenland are plentiful and good size. Iceland has a good run of Sea Trout and excellent Brown Trout fishing in some of the inland lakes and rivers. There are two species of trout in Ireland that only exist in Ireland and one of those trout can be found in only one lake in the world.

England, Wales and Scotland are countries where fly fishing began. There is history and some of the most famous rivers in the world. There is fishing in the southwestern chalk streams not far from Stonehenge, fishing on the moors and fishing near Lock Ness. It is wading in the historic rivers that are part of the British Isles. Be part of the Trout Adventure by exploring the Islands Trout Site.
